14 arrested in Algerian killings

ALGIERS (R) — Security forces hunting the killers of three Algerian border guards have arrested 14 people, the defence minister said Monday. The Algerian news agency, quoting the ministry, said some arms seized by a 60-strong band that attacked the southeastern border post before dawn a obstrong band that attacked the southeastern obtuer post before tawn on Friday had also been recovered. Special, troops and national police, backed by helicopters, are hunting the group, said to be led by an Islamic obtuenest named Aissa Messaoudi who is also known as Tayeb the Afghan because of his frequent visits to Afghanistan. The attackers, shouting Allfun Akhbar, seized arms and ammunition during the raid on the booker post, a communication centre, at Guemmar, some 70 kilometres from the Tunisian border. Three guards had their throats cut by the trackers. Five guards were wounded, as was one attacker who was captured. Joint delegation heads for U.S. after wrangle over visa

Negotiators carry 'spirit of Madrid' to Washington

By P.V. Vivekanand Jordan Times Staff Reporter

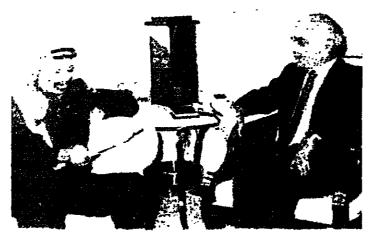

AMMAN — The joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation to bilateral Arab-Israeli peace talks left for Washington Monday evening after a 10-hour delay caused by a wrangle over American visas for some of the advisors for the Palestinian negotiators. It was not immediately known whether and what form of a compromise was reached between the Palestinians and the U.S. administration, but all indications were that the Palestinians had resigned to accepting the American position over visas for any member of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) as advisor to the delegates.

Palestinian spokeswoman Hanan Ashrawi described the dispute as a "form of political press-

"There are some cases that will be pursued and some were resolved," Dr. Ashrawi told a hastily-called press conference. In carefully worded phrases, Dr. Ashrawi presented a business-asusual situation but it was evident, according to analysts, that the Palestinians had decided that it would be against their interests at this point in time to pursue the issue further.

Settlers vow to set up new colony OCCUPIED JERUSALEM (R)

 Jewish settlers vowed Monday to start another colony in the occupied West Bank to avenge the shooting of an Israeli and threatened to send armed patrols into Palestinian areas.

"Wherever Jewish blood is spilled, a settlement has to rise," Zvi Katzover, "mayor" of the Kiryat Arba settlement, told Reuters. "We will put a settlement there no matter what. If the government wants to test us, let them. We will stand up to the

Mr. Katzover spoke two days before U.S.-brokered Arab-Israeli peace talks were due to resume in Washington and a day after unknown assailants seriously wounded a settler in the occupied West Bank.

He accused the government of failing to protect settlers and said they would take matters into their own hands by starting armed patrols in Arab towns and villages as early as Tuesday — although the army was unlikely to allow such a provocative step.

Sunday's attack on a 44-yearold Israeli from the West Bank settlement of Ofra was the second in five weeks. On Oct. 28, unknown assailants ambushed a bus taking settlers to a rally against the peace talks, killing the Israeli driver and a woman settler.

"The government made all the mistakes it can possibly make. They went to these talks and the Americans are bending the government's limbs ...," Mr. Katzover said.

Israel says Dec. 4 boycott because of U.S. proposals

TEL AVIV (R) — A key aide to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Monday Israel would boycott this week's start of Middle East peace talks, mainly because it objected to U.S. ideas on how to reach a settlement.

Yossi Ben Aharon, probably the most influential of Mr. Shamir's advisers, dismissed fears Israel would suffer a propaganda defeat by failing to appear on Wednesday and said Washington had to understand Israel will not accept terms it does not like.

Mr. Ben Aharon told Reuters Israel would have "some representation" at talks next-Monday - five days after the scheduled start — but still wanted a U.S. response to Israel's terms. The idea of starting talks without us isn't serious," Mr. Ben Aharon earlier told Israeli Television. "After all they can't do anything without us.

Israel had objected to a Dec. 4 resumption of talks in Washington, saying it wanted meetings to start on Dec. 9 and move after only two sessions to a site nearer

However, Mr. Ben Aharon's strongest objection was to U.S. proposals on resolving the decades-old conflict that were included in the invitations to all the content by which the U.S. wanted us to hold the negotiations..." said Mr. Ben Aharon, who has had stormy relations with U.S.

Israel also wanted a timetable giving five-day gaps between each meeting to emphasise that the Jewish state is holding separate talks with each Arab group.

"I don't want to guess the future but I want it to be understood the United States should understand there is a limit to what Israel is willing to do to enter a process that is unacceptable to us," Mr. Ben Aharon

"I think if they understand there is a certain format Israel can accept... then the continuation will be healthier and more acceptable. And I think sooner or later we will be back on the track in which this process was voyage would have created no cold war days. Witnesses said a Turkish gunboat followed the 65,000-tonne Admiral Kuznetsov governs the passage of warships through the Turkish straits under the supervision of NATO-member Turkey, appears to ban aircraft

Kuznetsov as a cruiser. The Soviet Union's collapse and the waning of superpower rivalry means the warship's passage through the only route from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean has caused few ripples. "Five or six years ago we might have objected," a U.S. diplomat speculated. "Now with the changes in the Soviet Union, we are just wondering who it belongs to — Russia? the Ukraine?

Georgia?" Western analysts say the Kuznetsov, with angled and ski-jump flight decks, can carry about 60 combat jets and helicopters, but no aircraft could be seen on its decks on Monday.

The 43,000-tonne Kiev, a Soviet warship viewed in the West as an

Egyptian leader doubts U.S. will strike at Libya

CAIRO (R) - Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak has said he did not believe the United States would take military action against Libya to punish it for its alleged role in the 1988 bombing of a Pan Am airliner over Scotland.

There were contacts between me and the United States and I do not believe that America will take military action," Mr. Mubarak told Mayo, weekly newspaper of the ruling National Democratic Party, in an interview published Monday.

"I do not believe the United States will undertake any military action because the current American leadership has logic," the Egyptian leader added.

Britain and the United States accused Libya last month of masterminding the December 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, which killed 270 people.

Libya has denied the charge and called for a neutral international body to investigate the allegation.

London and Washington last week said Tripoli must surrender two Libyan intelligence agents suspected of blowing up Flight 103, accept responsibility for the bombing, pay compensation, and renounce terrorism.

U.S. officials believe the Lockerbie bombing was a reprisal for U.S. air raids on Tripoli in 1986 when Muammar Qadhafi's personal compound was struck in retaliation for alleged Libyan role in an attack against Americans in Diplomats say Egypt, Washington's strongest Arab ally, urged its Western allies to refrain from using force against Libya.

The two Arab states improved ties in late 1989 and Mr. Mubarak has forged a close working rela-tionship with Colonel Qadhafi.

"We in turn tell them (the Americans) our opinion frequently and honestly in any issue," said Mr. Mubarak, who discussed the charges with Col. Qadhafi during a brief visit to Egypt Thursday.

We are looking for solutions. The issue has taken a political pattern and I do not want to enter into details ..." Mr. Mubarak

A state-owned Egyptian newspaper, which often voices official opinion, said Saturday Libya's offer to refer the issue to an international body was the sole solution to the dispute.

"Why doesn't President Bush accept since he is confident of the evidence he has under his bands?" editor-in-chief Ibrahim Sa'ada said in the weekly newspaper Akhbar Al Yom.

Diplomats said Egypt normalised ties with Libya after years of sharp differences when Col. Qadhafi agreed in 1989 to renounce terrorism and expel alleged extremists like Palestinian leader Abu Nidal.

A senior British minister renewed calls on Libya to hand over the alleged bombers of Flight 103 before leaving Monday on a trip to North Africa to seek Arab support for the demand.
Foreign Office Minister Douglas Hogg was due to arrive in Algeria and will visit Tunisia, Egypt and Malta later in the week to try to put pressure on Libya.

Mr. Hogg said it was important that Libya surrendered the two men accused by Britain and the United States. "I shall be seeking to get the support of my friends I visit in the next week or so to persuade Colonel Oadhafi to do just that," Mr. Hogg said at London's Heathrow Airport.

"The absence of an extradition treaty certainly doesn't stand in the way of his surrendering these people," Mr. Hogg told British Broadcasting Corporation radio. He said he did not believe a face-to-face meeting with Col. Qadhafi would be very produc-

The European Community called on Libya Monday to hand over Libyans accused of blowing up the Pan Am and UTA airliners plane but did not discuss what would happen if Tripoli refused. Dutch Foreign Minister Hans van den Brock said.

He told a news conference that the 12 EC foreign ministers meeting in Brussels urgently appealed to Libya to comply with requests by France, Britain and the United States to hand over agents suspected of blowing up the two airliners.

Mr. Van de Broek said the EC ministers fully endorsed the French and British requests to Libya, saying the 12 had strong feelings on the issue in line with their general stand against terror-

Although ministers had not dis-cussed how to react if Libya refused to comply, he added: "I hope and expect the government of Libya to be aware that a satisfactory conclusion of this very important issue is something that has much to do with the feture quality of relations between the twelve and Libya."

Before the latest allegations of ·Libyan responsibility for the blasts, Tripoli was actively lobbying for the scrapping of existing EC sanctions which include a bar on arms sales and restrictions on its diplomats in EC capitals.

U.N. team reports hidden chemical bomb gear in Iraq

BAHRAIN (R) - U.N. inspectors returning from Iraq said Sunday they found chemical bombmaking equipment in a surprise visit to a sugar factory and unde-clared Scud missile "cradles" at an ammunition storage site.

Karen Jansen, head of a team of chemical and biological arms experts, told reporters previous U.N. inspectors had found the bomb-making equipment was moved from Iraq's main chemical facility at Muthana, north of Bashdad, before the Gulf war.

Iragi authorities were asked to return the equipment from its hiding place at a sugar factory in the northern Iraq town of Mosul. to Muthana, since chosen as the site for the destruction of Baghdad's chemical arsenal

Iraq told U.N. inspectors the material, which had been used to make chemical bombs, had all been returned. Verifying this was part of the 18-member team's mission, she said.

"There was well over 100 pieces of equipment that were still remaining at Mosul. Some of it may have been general purpose ... but a number of items, roughly half, were clearly bomb-making pieces of machinery — drills and presses," she said.

Ms. Jansen was speaking in Bahrain, the field headquarters for all U.N. inspection teams, on return from a 12-day trip to Iraq.

She said the team made un-announced visits to 16 suspected weapons productions sites spread over the entire country. On one reconnaissance flight, they saw three empty Scud missile cradles at an ammunition storage site 80 kilometres west of Karbala.

Iraqi officials maintained the equipment had not been declared ecause their record-keeping was not up to Western standards, but Ms. Jansen said this was hard to

"It did not appear to be a deliberate hide ... but at the same time if in fact they are truly anxious to go ahead and bring forward absolutely everything they should be a lot more conscientions in their efforts," she said.

Ms. Jansen described the discrepancy over the bomb-making equipment as "much more serious" and said the authorities had been asked to return the equipment to Muthana immediately.

She said there were still many unanswered questions about fraq's chemical weapons programme, including precisely what kinds of chemicals and munitions Iraq had imported, where they were made, how many were used in testing and development, and how many were used in the 1980-88 war against Iran.

Insistence by Iraqi authorities that they kept no records of those details was also hard to swallow because they had impeccable records of other programmes, she

Mr. Jansen, an American, said her team had problems at first because their inspections were held without any advance warning.

"Initially things were a little rough, we had some attitude problems. By the end of the mission they realised how serious the situation was and there were no overt problems," she said. Iraq has about 45,000 filled chemical munitions - including aerial bombs, artillery shells,

rockets and mortar bombs -

The question of retaliation against hostage-takers has been one of the key points in the negotiations which involved Iran, as Western governments.

A U.N. statement issued at the Syrian capital Sunday said "Important progress" had been made towards a final solution of the hostage crisis. It made no reference to any no-retaliation pledge but said U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar was confident that the undertaking made to his hostage mediator Giandomenico PICCO the va would be kept.

Tehran Radio, monitored in 'Cicippio's release today has Nicosia, also said the Revolutionary Justice Organisation (RJO) Israeli servicemen to the Jewish which held Mr. Cicippio had received during the Damascus talks a videotape of Shiekh Abdul Karim Obeid, a Lebanese Shiite Muslim cleric Israel seized in 1989 to use as a bargaining chip in prisoner exchange deals.

RJO would soon release the tape of the pro-Iranian cleric, whose release is the most important demand of the kidnap As part of the exchange so far,

Israel has freed some 100 Arab prisoners taken from Lebanor and returned the bodies of nine Lebanese guerrillas. Arab groups have returned the bodies of two state.

CAIRO (R) — Judgment on an Egyptian Islamic banking scandal was postponed again Monday when a court adjourned the trial of a lawyer accused of depositing a false cheque to rescue the Rayyan Islamic Investment Company. Rashad Nabih, accused of signing a cheque worth 1.54 billion Egyptian pounds ($460 million) without having the funds to back it, petitioned last week to be tried by a different court. The judge said the trial would be adjourned until he had ruled on the petition. A lawyer for some of the 187,000 depositors in Rayyan, who had savings worth 1.9 billion pounds ($570 million) frozen when the company was shut down in 1988, said no date had been set for the ruling. Mr. Nabih did not appear in the courthouse, which was thronged with angry depositors demanding compensation.

3 police hurt in clash with French Arabs

AMIENS, France (R) — Three police officers were injured in a second consecutive night of clashes between not police and dozens of young French Arabs in this northern city, police said Sunday. Two of the three police casualties were hit by air rifle pellets and the third was struck by a flying stone. It was not known if any Arabs were injured. Half a dozen parked cars were set ablaze during the clashes which began on Saturday night when Arabs blocked traffic while trying to stage a sit-in strike in the centre of town. The clashes mostly involve teenage children of "Harkis," or auxiliary Muslim soldiers who fought for France in the 1954-1962 Algerian independence war, and who sought refuge in metropolitan France afterwards to avoid reprisals. Five policemen were hurt in clashes on Friday night. Many of the Harkis' children say French authorities failed to sufficiently aid their parents, who are French nationals, when they settled here and that the community now has an exceptionally high unemployment rate.

Afghan party defends closure of newspaper

KABUL (R) - Afghanistan's ruling party has defended its decision to close down Kabul's biggest selling newspaper, saying it had done its job in fostering a free press. The weekly Akhbar-i-Hafta failed to appear last Thursday after the Watan (Homeland) Party withdrew financial support in a move that diplomats interpreted as a victory for hardliners in the former Communist Party. Watan said in a statement from its propaganda and enlightenment department the paper had "achieved its purpose and was now superfinous." It deplored "irresponsible comments" from the paper's editor, Dr. Zahir Tanin, who said in an interview last week the closure of the paper was an attack on democracy. Although operating within confines set by the party, the paper had tended to express the views of party members who wanted more

Polisario wants pressure on Rabat

ALGIERS (R) — The Polisario Front, seeking independence for the Western-Sahara, called Sunday for international pressure to stop Rabat sending what it termed "tens of thousands of Moroccans to settle in our occupied towns." The front also called in a statement for an "end to the continued violations of the ceasefire by Morroco and the increasing provocations aimed at aborting the United Nations peace plan." Polisario guerrillas and Moroccan troops fought for more than 15 years in the former Spanish colony, claimed by Rabat, until a U.N.-sponsored ceasefire last September. A referendum giving Saharans the choice between independence and integration with Morocco is due next year, but both sides have accused the other of trying to sabotage it. At the heart of the problem lies the question of who should be eligible to vote.

Ghozali: Immigrants hostages of French politics

PARIS (R) — Algeria's Prime Minister Sidahmad Ghozali said Sunday France's one-million-strong Algerian community was hostage to French politicians seeking to cash in on auti-immigrant feelings. "The emigrants are held hostage to political manoeuvres, to in-fighting between French politicians," Mr. Ghozali told France's Antenne 2 television channel in an interview recorded in

Jordan takes part in preparatory meeting for summit

AMMAN (Petra) - Jordan is taking part in a meeting by Islamic countries' foreign ministers due to open in Dakar, Senegal, Thursday to prepare for the Islamic Countries Summit meeting on Dec. 9.

Foreign Minister Kamel Abu Jaber, who left Amman for the Senegalese capital Monday, said that the meeting will prepare the agenda for the summit, which is expected to discuss a bost of important issues of concern to the Islamic Nation. The most important of these issues, he said, is the Palestine question and the Arab-Israeli conflict as well as current efforts to reach a comprehensive and peaceful settlement the region based on U.N. Security Council resolutions and international legitimacy.

The minister, who is leading a group of Jordanian officials, said that the summit was expected to discuss current world affairs, means of rebuilding solidarity in the Islamic World and challenges facing Islamic countries. Dr. Abu Jaber said that Jordan will take part in the summit meeting and will do all it can to rally the ranks of the Islamic nations.

The foreign minister also said that he was looking forward to the meetings with his counterparts in the Arab and Islamic nations to coordinate positions and to discuss current effort to achieve a Middle East peace.

Prime Minister Sharif Zeid Ben Shaker has stressed that the new ted to the implementation of this programme.

In his speech from the throne, which is to also serve as the government's policy statement, His Majesty King Hussein referred to the difficulties facing the Jordanian economy. But, he noted, the government will persist in dealing with the problems and will strive to reduce the trade deficit in the balance of payments through increasing and diversifying exports, encouraging tourism and reducing imports.

Last month, the government of outgoing Prime Minister Taher Masri announced the 1992 fiscal budget, which revealed a deficit of JD 107 million and said that the deficit will be covered by external and internal loans.

Dr. Fariz, a member of a Jordanian team led by Foreign Minister Kamel Abu Jaber, is negotiating financial assistance from the European Community (EC) to stimulate the national economy and overcome the present economic difficulties.

Accompanying Dr. Fariz on his visit to Washington is Dr. Michel Marto, deputy governor of the Central Bank of Jordan (CBJ).

Ministry reviewing laws dealing with operations of village councils

AMMAN (J.T.) — The Ministry of Municipal and Rural Affairs and the Environment has just embarked on a comprehensive revision of its laws and regulations concerning the local councils and their activities with a view to modernising them.

One of the main objectives of this revision is to grant expanded authority to heads of local councils and bigger roles for the councils to serve as socio-economic units and local governments, according to Minister of Municipal and Rural Affairs and the Environment Abdul Razzak Tubeishat.

The modernisation programme will be largely based on the experiences gained in municipal and village councils development and service sectors in a manner that would cater to modern needs, the minister explained in a statement to the Jordan News Agency, Pet-

Positive politics

THE SURPRISE withdrawal of Deputy Abdul Majeed Shreideh from the race for the post of speaker of the Lower House of Parliament in favour of Muslim Brotherhood Deputy Abdul Latif Arabiyat offers a unique opportunity for a harmonious and constructive relationship among the various political blocs in Parliament. Mr. Shreideh was the candidate of the Constitution and National blocs that group 33 deputies. That could have assured Mr. Shreideh victory in the elections for the speakership had he went ahead with his nomination. Mr. Shreideh has very clearly signalled to the Muslim Brotherhood that they were required to play their part in these critical times when he said in his speech that "the Islamists have not been included in the Cabinet so let them be (influential) in Parliament." In effect the parliamentary blocs have all shown a degree of maturity in dividing the national task among themselves at this critical stage in our history. In this sense, democracy in Jordan has registered a real victory. With the government and the parliamentary blocs represented in it extending their hand to the opposition, the stage has now been set for a positive development in the quest for further promotion and consolidation of democracy in the Kingdom.

Obviously the pressing issues of the day are behind this conciliatory move within the Lower House of Parliament. Deputy Shreideh said so in so many words when he referred to the urgent national issues confronting the country as calling for cooperation among all factions in Parliament.

Indeed peace in the Middle East is not all that concerns Jordan and Jordanians. The country is still under the grip of harsh economic conditions that resulted in increased unemployment and poverty. There is always a sense of urgency when such formidable challenges are approached and dealt with. Then there are regional issues which stand to affect the entire Middle East, including of course Jordan. Water and the environment, concerns for the entire region. require a united rather than a divided effort if we want to resolve them in a positive manner and in a way which could ensure benefits to our country. All Jordanians have a stake in which is going around them, either regionally or internationally, and no one can afford useless bickering between the Parliament and government or irrational division among the principal political groups in the Lower House. With Speaker Arabiyat extending renewed falicitations to Prime Minister Sharif Zeid Ben Shaker, we hope that his bloc in the House would not vote negatively against the new government. Democracy, like anything else, is not about negative politics but has a lot to do with positive contribution.

ARABIC PRESS COMMENTARIES

AL RA'I Monday described His Majesty King Hussein's speech from the Throne delivered to Parliament Sunday as comprehensive, expressing the full and deep confidence in the country's ability to pursue the objectives of democracy and construction. The speech voiced the aspirations of the Jordanian people and presented a comprehensive analysis of the Kingdom's foreign and domestic policies, said the paper. But at the same time, the King's speech to Parliament and the nation contained a clear warning against any attempt by any group to impede the democratic process or deviate it from its course or cause a crisis in the existing relations between the executive and legislative authorities, the paper said. The speech also warned against the imposition by a certain group of its ideology on the rest of the Jordanian people undermining citizens' basic rights and stemming initiatives by any individual to offer service to the country and the nation, the paper added. Needless to say that the speech, which is serving as the government's policy statement will be respected and upheld by the executive authority; and it is hoped that Parliament will give the government a hand in implementing the Royal directives so that the democratic system can be safeguarded. Time and again, said the paper, King Hussein reiterated and reaffirmed that Jordan will not go back from its democratic course and the speech from the Throne came to further stress such principle and to show the way for the government and Parliament alike.

A columnist in Al Ra'i Arabic daily said that Jordan is burdened with nearly $9.2 billion in debts, accumulated between 1975 and 1987, and that this debt exceeds by four times the Kingdom's ability to pay its dues. Fahed Al Fanek said that it is in Jordan's interest to obtain long-term soft loans at present to help it overcome pressing economic problems and help retain the minimum standard of living of its people. Such long-term loans with very low interest payable over 20 years are bearable and no doubt part of such debt will be waived by the creditors, the writer said. He expressed hope that the creditor governments will in due time cancel their debts to Jordan, but until that time comes, the country is in need of these long-term soft loans to tidy it over the present difficulties and help Jordanians retain their present minimum standard of living. The writer said that the debts accumulated in the past decade have caused a drop in the value of the currency by 50 per cent and the Jordanians standard of living by 40 per cent.

The View from Fourth Circle

Power, change, and dances of the jungle beasts

YOU know that this is a moment of great historical change in the Middle East because everyone is acting in such a peculiar m Change is evident in domestic developments in several Middle Eastern countries, as well as in political capitals further afield,

- the manner in which Parliament forced a change of government in Jordan, without forcing a change in policy.

— the tit-for-tat feuding between Israel and the United States. - the sudden reinvigoration of extremist and provocative acts by the Israeli government.

The historical change I refer to really boils down to a very simple process: power is being transferred from the old ways of military- and security-minded people to the new ways of civil government and political leaderships that seek the equal application of human and political rights to all people in the area. A region that sought unsuccessfully to assure its stability and security through the psyche of fear and the politics of force is now lurching towards a new set of political criteria. In the lurching, otherwise rational men act in strange ways.

The dispute between the U.S. and Israel about starting the bilateral peace talks in Washington on Dec. 4 or Dec. 9 is a case in point. The date is irrelevant. The real issue here is power. Who decides the date and venue? Clearly, the United States does in this case. What does this portend for the future? It suggests that Washington may also lay down the law on more substantive matters, such as Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab land, Palestinian rights, or American aid to Israel. The power balance is shifting. Scared warriors cannot forever dictate policy. So they challenge, they ask for five more days in December. They try to believe that the world has not changed, that their old ways still

They also seek to make change in the region difficult. The Israelis keep building settlements n Palestine and the Golan Heights. Their parliament affirms that the Golan can never be returned to Syria. Their prime minister dives into the Old Testament, desperately seeking shelter from the contemporary winds of cold reality. They take over more homes in Arab Jerusalem and raid the archives of the most sacred Islamic holy places in Palestine. These are the desperate acts of old men who fear change, who see power slipping out of their hands and into the hands of a new generation of Arabs and Israelis that sees security as the consequence of justice and equal rights for all, rather than of military might and physical occupation of other people's lands. These old men from the past try to ignore the signals of change from the new generations, the opinion polls in Israel and among American Jews that show a massive majority in favour of freezing settlements, exchanging land for peace, and coexisting on equal terms with the Palestinians and other Arabs. As power shifts from the old, scarred warrriors to the young who speak of justice, political actions become rough, emotions shrill.

Take domestic politics in Jordan as another very different example that belies the similar phenomenon of societies in change and power in transition. Why would the ancient regime-type characters who dominate the Constitution Bloc challenge the young government of Taher Masri? I have heard many explanations, of which three seem possible: a) some people resented his Palestinian origin, b) some people resented not being included in his cabinet, c) some people resented the postponement of parliament for two months at the crucial moment when Mideast peace talks were starting, and they showed their resentment by challenging the prime minister and his cabinet.

Option (a) is probably applicable to a small number of small-minded people whom we can easily ignore, because they represent the past, and have no serious role in the future of this land and this region. Narrow ethnicity and false nationalism have been the plague of the Arabs in the last two decades, and should be left behind; in the ashes of the 1970s and 1980s. The overwhelming message from the grassroots of the Arab World today is not "where do you come from?", but rather, "where are

Options (b) and (c) are more likely. But what do they reveal about how political and economic power are wielded in Jordan today? They show that the process of democratisation is rather serious, even though is not yet impeccably decorous, deep, or widespread throughout society. Members of parliament suddenly realised that their positions entailed more than their candybarcoloured licence plates and new passports. They realised that they had an opportunity to participate in the apportioning and exercise of raw power - and raw power, in the end, means influence, jobs, contracts, financial benefits, the glow of the television lights, trips to foreign cities, meetings with important visitors from abroad, and the satisfaction of feeling self-important because your people chose to have you represent them in parliament. To become a cabinet minister assures you of lifetime financial security, and a substantial hike in your political and social standing in a society that is intensely political and socialised. It took about two years, but our MPs finally started to play the political game when they had a prime minister such as Taher Masri willing to play. Taher Masri should go down in the modern history of Jordan as the first prime minister who truly engaged in a political process, who responded to popular sentiment as represented in parliament, who put up with the silliness of some MPs who were flexing their young political muscles. This game was not possible in 1989-91 with Sherif Zeid Ben Shaker or Mudar Badran, mainly because of the complex interplay between the lure of power for MPs and the constraints imposed on them by social niceties and Arab traditions of courtesy.

Taher Masri changed all that, for he was correctly seen to be our first genuinely democratic prime minister (or, as the very perceptive and honest Jordanian modern historian Mustafa Hamarneh called him, our first "instinctively democratic" prime minister). Unlike Mr. Badran and Sherif Zeid, Mr. Masri was fair game. His territorial social base was sufficiently diffused to allow him to be challenged without permanently damaging family honour or bilateral social/economic interests. His status as a wealthy, self-made businessman and public servant from a traditional regional merchant family also increased his eligibility to be challenged. He was a product of the marketplace, and thus subject to the forces of the marketplace.

His status as an elected member of parliament was also a factor. He was a political animal living by the code of the jungle. The other jungle beasts found it not only permissible but perhaps even biologically obligatory to challenge his supremacy. Why should he be prime minister, and not someone else from parliament, if parliament wass suddenly the pool from which the wielders of

His strength was that he accepted the challenge, played by the democratic rules, and gracefully bowed out when he saw that his incumbency was the inevitable price to be paid for the continuing Jordanian transition to pluralistic and participatory democracy. The amazing thing is that the new government has adopted exactly the same policies of the Masri government — but it has a stronger base in parliament. So, the Masri policies were not the issue. The issue was power, but power is not totally without constraints, as we shall see with our new government Sheif Zeid poses a more problematic challenge to parliament, for he is not as easy to oppose, for four reasons: 1). He is a Sherif, a descendant of the Prophet Mohammad's noble family, and therefore slightly above the jungle of

He offered His Majesty King Hussein's speech as his government's political programme. While everyone will have comments about the speech, and many people will suggest amendments, additions or changes in emphasis, very few people will want to oppose it outright, because this would be seen as a personal gesture against the King — and that remains beyond the accepted rules of this constitutional monarchy. History will ultimately pass verdict on the policies of King Hussein, and our parliamentarians will be more than happy to leave that job to history.

Sherif Zeid offers the jungle of breather, a pause between bush battles during which the beasts retreat, regroup, tally their losses and gains, and review the landscape once again. It would not look good to bring down another government at a moment when the country presents itself as a budding democracy and a committed partner in the search for regional peace and stability.

His cabinet includes members from all major parliamentary blocs except the Muslim Brotherhood, so that the MPs' thirst for executive-style political power is largely

The real issue here, though, is not personalities, but power. Parliamentarians have woken up to the fact that they can increase their personal power and their impact on decision-making. They are testing how far they can go, flexing their young muscles, standing in front of the political mirror and admiring their newfound bulk. And, like adolescents who have been given a new car, they are pushing it to the limit, testing how fast they can go without crashing, driving dangerously on the edge.

All of this seems rather healthy to me. Remember, however.

that MPs now perform on a stage that is largely unmonitored. The press is letting them off easy, because the press is mostly envious, and wants to share the stage of power and profit with them. The electorate is intrigued, amused, busy elsewhere, or uninterested in the deeds of grown men acting like teenagers. Special interest groups, lobbies, and extra-parliamentary political forces are young or non-existent, and will take time to develop.

Our MPs were wonderful at challenging the old style of government and calling for new methods and policies. Now that they are in power, most of them have proved mediocre at presenting policies that can meet the challenges of the times. Most of them still think they live in pre-November 1989. They want to be perpetual opposition figures, while enjoying the perks of incumbency. They demand from the government many things, forgetting that they are part of the government. They admire themselves in the political mirror, not knowing that the mirror will soon shatter from the sheer intensity of their andacity.

We have to put up with this until the MPs themselves discover that they, too, are accountable to the people, just as the prime minister and the government are accountable to them. I await the next general elections with great relish, because MPs who now engage in jungle ceremonies and wild tribal dances will have to answer to the people who gave them power in the first place — the voters. Some MPs will be thrown out, unceremoniously dumped after being exposed as false and selfish leaders. Others will be re-elected, triumphant in their personal credibility and their political commitment to a genuinely pluralistic democratic process. Taher Masri and the many others of his breed will enjoy their moment in history, secure in their unselfishness, selfconfident in their commitment to an Arab identity based on dignity and democracy rather than on dinars and dollars.

This is the way of nations in transition, and we should welcome it as a healthy and vital phenomenon. As political and economic power become mroe diffused, expanding from a limited circle of interests to a broader electoral base, strange things will happen. grown men will act in peculiar ways, speeding cars will rattle the ground beneath us, and children will wake up to the sound of mirrors crashing. Yet, the people will be the victors in the end, for not only will they ultimately get more democratic and responsive government, but they also get to watch an entertaining show on

North Korea risks becoming second Iraq in nuclear row

By Seigo Sakamoto Reuter

TOKYO - Isolated North Korea could become an international pariah and suffer similar sanctions to Iraq if it goes on resisting world pressure to open its secret nuclear facilities to outside scrutiny, Korea analysts said on

They said failure to comply, in defiance of the United States and other concerned nations, could mean Pyongyang, like Baghdad this year, would be faced with a U.N.-mandated mission demanding access to make sure it is not secretly developing nuclear

North Korea, a signatory to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, has long been under pressure to sign the follow-up nuclear safeguards agreement, which would allow international inspection of its nuclear facilities.

North Korea strongly denies it is developing nuclear arms, but has refused to accept unconditional inspection of its plant at Yongbyon, 90 kilometres north of Pyongyang. This led to fears in Washington, Seoul and Tokyo that it is close to acquiring the ability to make nuclear arms.

Visiting Seoul this month, U.S. Defence Secretary Dick Cheney added to the sense of crisis.

Warning that a nuclear-armed North Korea would be "the most serious threat to peace and stability on the Korean peninsula and East Asia," he announced that Washington was indefinitely postponing planned troop pullouts

The United States, which fought alongside the south in the 1950-53 Korean war, has kept forces there ever since under a defence pact.

Within days of Mr. Cheney's tough talking, Pyongyang took what appeared to be a concilia-

By coincidence South Korean Defence Minister Lee Jong-Koo, speaking the same day, also hinted at compromise. He told parliament that Seoul, long hostile to any linkage between North Korean nuclear moves and weapons stored on its soil, was now considering accepting simultaneous inspection if the North would abandon making nuclear arms.

Teruo Komaki, of Tokyo's Institute of Developing Economies. said the Pyongyang statement represents somewhat of a softening in North Korea's stance in that it gave the timing of signing in a concrete term when the United States begins to that end."

Mr. Okonogi and Mr. Komaki agreed that Pyongyang would probably sign the accord and go as far as accepting inspection, after various twists and turns, although there still remained difficult technical problems in implementing simultaneous inspec-

Another Korea watcher, who asked not to be named, was less impressed.

"The north may sign the accord," he said, "but it is unlikely to accept inspection because it intends to go nuclear to get the military upper hand over the south. It is playing for time to Institute of National Defence Studies sounded a similar note of caution. "Even if it does sign the accord, North Korea may duck allowing inspection on one pretext or another while pressing on to become a nuclear power

Whatever Pyongyang's hiddden agenda, analysts generally agree that it has little time left to "Unless it makes clear its intention to sign the safeguards accord by next spring, it could become a second Iraq," Mr. Komaki said. "Washington is losing patience."

Mr. Okonogi agreed. "North Korea, like Iraq before it, could face a compulsory U.S.-despatched inspection to stop it making nuclear weapons."

With Washington expected to pull its tactical nuclear weapons out of South Korea by the end of this year, Pyongyang's time for manoeuvre was slipping away, Mr. Okonogi said.

"If the north keeps refusing to sign the accord," he said, "an International Atomic Energy Agency meeting of governors in February is expected to act to condemn Pyongyang."

"Should this not work, the U.N. Security Council is likely to adopt a resolution calling for economic sanction... Things are now moving according to such a schedule that North Koreans are beginning to feel a sense of crisis," "They seem to have concluded they must take some steps before facing unwelcome action," Mr. Okonogi said. "Even economic sanctions would deal a serious blow to that impoverished state." In September, President George Bush announced he was ending deployment of U.S. tactical nuclear weapons worldwide, including those deployed in South Korea.

South Korean President Roh Tae-Woo followed up with an unexpected declaration early in November renouncing manufacture, storage or use of nuclear weapons by the south.

Analysts saw these moves as designed to give North Korea a face-saving pretext to abandon its nuclear arms programme.

Despite its vow, Israel locked in peace moves with PLO

By Howard Goller Renter

JERUSALEM -- Israel is locked in Middle East peace moves with the PLO, despite its vow never to talk to the Palestinian organisation it regards as its biggest foe.

in Washington next week, nego-tiators for Israel's most hardline sovernment in history will again sit across a table from negotiators who tell the world they represent the PLO.

It's a hard pill to swallow for Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir. He officially brands the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), a terrorist group bent on des-troying the Jewish state.

He has had little choice, facing pressure from both a U.S. administration and an Israeli public keen to advance the talks luanched in Madrid last month aimed at ending 43 years of Arab-Israeli conflict.

Washington, Israel's guardian ally and main supplier of economic and military aid, has been eager for a solution since forging an alliance with Arab States in the Gulf war.

Palestinians insist it is no secret their guiding hand is the Tunis-based organisation of PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat.

"Everyone knows it," Hanan Ashrawi, spokeswoman fo the team representing Palestinians in the peace talks, told Israel's biggest newspaper Yedioth Ahronoth last week.

"It is impossible to make any binding decisions regarding the peace process without decisions of the PLO leadership.

Israeli officials, while not acknowledging it, appear to recognise the PLO is involved.

Police recommended putting Ashrawi on trial for an inteview with Jordan Television they said proved she had broken Israel's anti-terrorism law barring contacts with the PLO.

Then on Monday Israeli Attorney General Yosef Harish ruled "the public interest" would be better served by not prosecuting Dr. Ashrawi. He cited peace When talks resume as expected negotiations as a reason.

Israel bars both, Dr. Ashrawi and leading Palestinian nationalist Faisal Al Husseini from joining the negotiations because of their support for the PLO.

Yet Haidar Abdul Shafi, a doctor from the Gaza Strip who serves as chief Palestinian pegotiator at the table, was himself a co-founder of the PLO in 1964. Israeli officials take comfort in Palestinians from the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank are fast finding their own voice inde-pendent of the leadership in Tunis.

For more than two years the surveys of pollster Rafi Smith have shown at least half of Israelis would negotiate with the PLO is it were seen to recognise Israel and renounce terrorism.

But Mr. Smith says Israelis would overwhelmingly prefer to negotiate with Palestinians from Israeli-occupied lands - even if they support the PLO - rather than PLO leaders that include Mr. Arafat.

The U.S., which suspended an 18-month dialogue with the PLO in July 1990 after an aborted raid on Israel by one of the factions of the Tunis-based organisation, refuses visas for PLO members except on humanitarian grounds. The State Department reaffirmed health this policy last week and said no 12nd members would be given imagic visas to accompany the Palestigraile nian delegation as advisors.

"The Palestinians decided that it was not worth the effort to sin the pursue the dispute with Washingin ton," said an informed source, pointing out that it would have been a setback for the Palestinian approach if they were seen as adopting a hardline stand as Israel, which was maintaining its position Monday night that it was ready to go to Washington on Dec. 9 instead of Dec. 4 and that the talks should move to the Middle East after one or two meetings.

The row over visas was also seen as a climbdown by the PLO, which, in the face of being denied a direct role in the peace talks, is directing the delegation from behind the scenes.

"The crucial question was over the wisedom of the PLO leadership pressing hard in its effort to make a point and reaffirm its role," said the source. "Obviously such a stand would have undermined the entire process and they decided against it."

Dr. Ashrawi, who described Jordanian-Palestinian coordination as excellent, said there was "a certain level of (overall) Arab coordination, but it is not perfect.

There is room for improvement." The Syrian and Lebanese delegations to the separate sets of bilaterals also headed for Washington Monday.

The Jordanian side to the joint delegation is headed by Dr. Maiali and included General Abdul Hafez Mare'i, Fayez Tarawoeh, Munther Haddadin, Ahmad Qatanani, Walced Khalidi, Talal Al Hassan, Marwan Muasher, Musa Breizat, Awn Khasawneh, Anwar Khatib, Mohammad Bani Hani and Nayef Al Qadi.

WASHINGTON — U.S. Democratic presidential candidates, aching to battle President George Bush in 1992, are finding themselves hampered by shoestring budgets and scant media atten

With the first primary election just 10 weeks away, economic hard times and uncertainty over a possible challenge by New York Governor Mario Cuomo are making it tough for the candidates to coax contributions out of potential donors.

Political activists already pinched by the recession are waiting to see whether Mr. Cuomo, seen by many as the Democrat best placed to beat Republican Bush, will enter the race before deciding where to put their money and

And while Mr. Bush is given extensive daily media coverage, the Democrats get only the occasional feature or televised debate that focuses on them as a group rather than as individuals.

"None of us are going to be blessed with a great deal of resources and, not surprisingly, the news media itself is a little short of cash. So it's a problem," candidate Bob Kerrey, a Nebraska

JORDAN BASKETBALL ROUNDUP

By Aleen Bannayan Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN - Al Jalil and Al Jazireh secured their places among the top four teams next to Al Ahli and Al Orthodoxi, leaving Al Hussein and Al Watani struggling to secure their fifth and sixth rankings in the midst of a remarkable improvement in Al Ashrafieh's results, as eight matches were played in the third week of the first division basketball championship.

In the first of four matches played Sunday, newcomers to the division Al Ashrafieh surprised Al Watani and led 24-10 at the beginning of the first half but Al Watani ended the first half to their advantage 44-38 and won the match 106-94 to the disappointment of Al Ashrafieh who lost a chance of scoring an unexpected win. In the other match played at Al Hassan Sports City in Irbid Al Ahli managed to score a 79-66 victory over Al Jalil thus giving Al Jalil a clear and early signal not to be over ambitious. Al Jalil apparently having other plans led at the beginning of the first half but Al Ahli's superior teamwork and agility enabled them to take the lead and win the first half. Al Jalil tried to minimise Al Ahli's scoring by a tight defence but Al Ahli overcame this to win the match 79-66, patiently awaiting their upcoming match against Al Orthodoxi. Meanwhile in Amman, bottom of the division Al Karak put up a good fight in their match against Al Hussein and scoring was quite close at the beginning. But Al Hussein expanded the difference to win the first half 40-33. Only Al Hussein's experience enabled them to keep their lead and win the match 86-66.

Al Orthodoxi scored an expected win of 92-58 over Al Jazireh, the first half ending 43-23.

In one of four matches played last Thursday, Al Jalil put an end to Al Watani's ambitions of playing in the top four as they beat Al

Al Ahli won the first half 47-32 and led 82-45 in the second half keeping their lead to win the match 95-70. Al Ashrafieh and Al Karak fought it out in a match that Al

Ashrafieh managed to win 55-52. In Thursday's fourth match Al Orthodoxi beat Al Hussein in match that witnessed the first suspension of the season as Al

Orthodoxi's Hilal Barakat was suspended for two matches. Al Orthodoxi won the first half 52-25. However Al Hussein played with greater confidence as both teams alternately scored in an interesting second half which Al Orthodoxi won with only one point (41-40) to win the match 93-65.

On Tuesday, Al Jalil will play Al Ashrafieh; Al Jazireh will meet Al Karak and Al Watani will clash with Al Hussein.

On Wednesday, basketball fans will witness the clash of the top two teams when Al Ahli meets Al Orthodoxi in the final match of the preliminary round due to be played at the Sports Palace court at Al Hussein Youth City in Amman.

New French tennis trio revive memories of old

LYON, France (R) - A new trio of Tennis musketeers jointed the swashbuckling heroes of another age at the weekend when France it last recaptured the Davis Cup. The exploits of Guy Forget, Henri Leconte and Yannick Noah were little short of miraculous as they upset the odds to wrest the cup from the clutches of holders the United States.

To add to the emotion of the occasion, the sprightly 93-yearold Jean Borotra, one of the legendary four musketeers who won the cup for France six times in a row between 1927 and 1932, was present to witness the historic handover.

If the two valiant left-handers Forget and Leconte performed the heroics on-court, the role of Noah in his first year as nonplaying captain was at least as

The players happily acknowledged Noah's leading role. "Yannick helped me to believe in myself and take the risks you need to win these sort of matches," Forget said affter clinching victory over Pete Sampras to seal the tie at 3-1. Leconte, who put France back in the match by surprisingly beating Sampras after Forget had lost the opening singles to Andre Agassi, said Noah's methods of preparation and his moulding of a tight-knit group had paid dividends.

Egypt fights to keep oil firms interested CAIRO (R) - Egypt is fighting to keep foreign oil companies in the country in the face of more tempting prospects elsewhere. Industry sources said that Royal Dutch/Shell Group was planning to sell its stake in one of Egypt's major oil-producing groupings.

Last month, British Petroleum

(B.P.) confirmed it was quitting the same consortium and Egypt. "It's going to be much more difficult to attract foreign invest-ment to Egypt," said one oil executive. "It's a growing trend that should be taken seriously." Oil production is Egypt's largest source of foreign revenue. Earnings of more than $2.5 billion in the year to June were a vital boost to the country's fragile

Shell and B.P., both rumoured to be frontrunners for a lucrative contract to help set Kuwait's shattered oil industry on its feet again, were each planning to sell 16.6 per cent shares in Suez Petroleum Company (SUCO), the industry sources said.

SUCO, which is 50 per cent owned by state firm Egyptian General Petroleum Company (EGPC) with the remaining sixth held by the German firm Deminex, produces about 100,000 barrels per day (b/d). Egypt's total output is 870,000 b/d.

In six months, new Oil Minister Hamdi Al Banbi has brought in new staff to fill senior positions and companies privately say they find the authorities easier to deal with than under his predecessor Abdul Hadi Kandeel.

But as personality clashes have faded, the root problems of operating in Egypt have emerged all

Although Egypt recently announced it had boosted reserves by nearly 50 per cent ot six billion barrels — about 18 years worth of current production fields are still small compared to many other oil-producing areas and economically marginal.

"I think they just covered their costs in Egypt and then thought there were better chances elsewhere," one Western economist based in Cairo said of B.P.'s decision to pull out.

does not help. Hopeful oil officials have billed the Western Desert as Egypt's great new prospect. But so far, a big find — in industry terms a field that would yield more than 50,000 b/d - has eluded companies lured to the area.

Domestic politics are another irritant to hard-boiled oil firms wanting to make money.

U.N. economists predict social unrest, anti-reform surge in former East Bloc economists Sunday forecast growing social unrest in 1992 in the Soviet Union and the former East Bloc with depression and unemployment fuelling pressure on governments to abandon economic reform.

But in its latest bi-annual report, the world body's Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) argues a new "Marshall plan" of coordinated Western assistance could put the region firmly on the road to recovery and political

"The declines in output in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union are now so large that it would be appropriate to speak of a depression," said the report, compiled by a team of European economists at ECE's Geneva headquarters.

The economists estimated the overall drop in industrial production for Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Romania and Yugoslavia at 19.5 per cent for 1991, and nine per cent and accelerating for the Soviet Union.

In the former East Germany, now part of a united German state, the fall this year was likely to be around 50 per cent but there were signs recovery was about to begin, they said. With all the ex-communist states forced to pursue tough measures in the switch to market economies, they said, it was increasingly uncertain how far their peoples would continue to accept the heavy costs without serious

"It seems likely that social unrest will increase in 1992 and that in some countries there will be increasing pressure to dilute or abandon the reform process," the 125-page report — or Economic Bulletin for Europe - added.

'There is growing evidence that the limits of endurance may be dangerously close and that a further fall in living standards may be strongly resisted," it said.

Production and consumption levels seemed set to continue to fall and unemployment and inflation to rise and there was a mounting danger frustration over the continuing hardships would increase the attraction of "simplistic solutions."

The report said annual inflation in September was running at 20 per cent in Hungary and 60 per the Soviet Union.

The ECE warnings came against the background of a minor resurgence in some east European countries of backing for former communist parties and of a rapid growth in support for nationalist groups with strongly right-wing programmes.

In this situation, the report said, it was urgent for Western governments and international organisations to decide how far they could support the reform process and then organise assistance on a scale necessary to ensure success.

In 1947, as western Europe was struggling to rebuild in the wake of World War II and communism appeared on the march, U.S. Secretary of State George Marshall launched a European recovery programme (ERP) to revive the continent's stricken econoeastern Europe and states emerging from the break-up of the Soviet Union. Under the "Marshall plan," only the United States provided aid but today some 24 countries and at least seven world financial organisations are involved in state-run economies. This dispersal has brought charges that much aid is wasted or duplicated and that limited financial and technical help is not fairly distributed. Some former East Bloc states argue the Soviet Union has preferential treat-

The ECE said creation of a new ERP could as a vivid display of outside backing help preserve domestic support for reform especially when the going gets technical assistance in setting up the structures essential for a successful market economy.

But ECE economists promoting the idea say a new recovery programme should turn the cash-

These include an efficient banking network, financial and taxation systems, contract laws and legislation protecting property rights — all destroyed under communist rule but which still existed in the devastated Europe of the mid-1940s.

The economists argue that financial support on the relative scale of the 1948 ERP would lose much of its effectiveness unless these structures are either in place or at least beginning to function as they would in full market systems.

The ECE report was critical of Western countries which maintain trade barriers against exports from eastern Europe, especially clothing, food and textile pro-

"The decline in interest rates will boost the economy as it will lower lending costs," Nuri Dogulu, general manager of the staterun Turkish Development Bank, said. Meanwhile, Turkey's economy minister is out to "break the devil's legs" in her struggle to stop state-run enterprises from crippling the country's finances.

Tansu Ciller, 44, is preparing economic reforms to curb inflation fuelled by huge losses made by state firms accounting for two-fifths of the national economy. Mr. Ciller, a former economics professor, became state minister in a coalition government formed by Suleyman Demirel last month. "Our economic reform prog-stone," she told weekly Ekonomik Panorama. A newcomer to politics, Ms.

Ciller has worked for two years with other academics, bankers and industrialists on a package she plans to launch on Dec. 10. Few details have emerged.

"We have a unique chance," she said of the alliance formed by Mr. Demirel's centre-right True Path Party and Erdal Inonu's Social Democrat Populist Party after the Oct. 20 election. Ms. Ciller inherits a near-record foreign exchange balance of $12 billion and a foreign debt of about $44 billion. The expected $35 million current account deficit is much lowerthan the $2.4 billion forecast, at. the start of the year. Exports are expected to total $14.6 billion, up 10 per cent over last year, according to official figures.

But inflation and corruption have clouded the domestic picture. Mr. Demirel named Orhan Kilercioglu as state minister to pursue financial irregularities and institute reforms. A senior treasury official said

Ms. Ciller would be told drastic action was needed to shut down unprofitable state companies and sell off the rest of get the economy back on its feet.

Their losses, expected to top 13 trillion lira ($2.6 billion) in 1991, strain fiscal policy, push up interest rates and contribute to inflation running at an annual 67 per cent.

Ms. Ciller described the losses of the state sector as "the devil's ramme will be a historic corner- legs which must be broken." She plans to incorporate all state companies, give them better management and then privatise most of them. State banks and mining and manufacturing companies, some of them created under Turkey's first president Mustafa Kemal Ataturk in the 1930s, are commonly overstaffed and inefficient.

Ukraine votes for independence, elects Kravchuk president

Ukraine has voted by a stunning margin of almost nine to one to leave the Soviet Union and elected Leonid Kravchuk as its president, preliminary election results showed Monday.

Mr. Kravchuk, a 57-year-old former Communist Party ideologist, swept to victory in the first round against five other candidates with 60 per cent of the vote, parliamentary official Nikolai Khamenko told a group of foreign election observers.

A few minutes earlier Mr. Kravchuk himself told the observers that 90 per cent of those who voted in Sunday's referendum gave their support to a declaration of independence proclaimed by the Ukrainian parliament last Preliminary results read on local radio by an electoral commission official put the figure at around 85 per cent. They said all districts, even those with big Russian majorities, voted "yes".

"A new Ukraine' has been born. It is a great historic moment," Kravchuk declared to applause from the observers, who said Sunday's voting had been peaceful and fair.

"The main thing now is to unite around the idea of independence," Mr. Kravchuk said. He promised that the Ukraine would give priority to relations with Russia, its largest and dominant neighbour.

Ukraine has been effectively ruled from Moscow since the two countries were linked by treaty in 1954. Its secession is likely to be far more of a psychological shock to Russian than the loss of the three tiny Baltic states.

over possible confrontation between the two biggest Soviet republics over their far-from-stable borders. Russian President Boris Yeltsin has already warned a Ukrainian break with the union could prompt a "review" of present boundaries.

Turnout in the voting was 83.7 per cent, indicating a substantial overall majority of the 37.5 million electorate in favour of secession, even including those who stayed at home. The result was a big setback for

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, who tried unsuccessfully to persuade the Ukraine to take part in a new union of sovereign Mr. Kravchuk told the obser-

Ivan Drach, chairman of the opposition Rukh Movement, told a reporter: "The main thing is we won the referendum." Mr. Drach's Movement supported the main opposition presidential candidate Vyacheslav Chornovil.

The majority in favour of independence was well over 90 per cent in the strongly nationalist west Ukraine, falling to around 70 per cent in the highly indus-trialised Donetsk region and 54 per cent in the Crimea, where many Russian-speakers favour a reunion of their peninsula with

Kravchuk said the Crimean majority for independence, though narrow, was enough to end arguments about the future

The lowest-pro-independence vote was in the Crimean naval port of Sevastopol, where only 36 per cent supported independ-

Several leading politicians said it was likely Mr. Kravchuk would now form a new goaverment including figures from the democratic opposition to replace the cabinet of Prime Minister Vitold

Mr. Fokin, appointed just over a year ago, has been much criticised by parliament for being too keen to sign agreement with Moscow and too cautious over economic reform.

Mr. Kravchuk, in his meeting with the observers, appeared to rule out fresh elections to parliament, saying agreement on a new constitution and electoral law, and the implementation of economic reforms, should take priority.

Nazarbayev wins in Kazakhstan

Meanwhile in Alma-Ata, Nursultan Nazarbayev emerged triumphant from Kazkhstan's first presidential poll Monday, saying he was ready for complete autonomy if Mikhail Gorbachev's efforts to build a new confederation failed. Officials results showed 98.8 per cent who took part in Sunday's elections endorsed Mr. Nazarbayev, the only candidate. "I will fight to maintain the Union of Sovereign States. If this does not work out then we ourselves must be prepared for total autonomy," he told Reuthere is a way forward, although there will be great difficulties,"

PATTAYA, Thailand (R) — The Khmer Rouge demanded Mon-day that 800 more U.N. peacekeeping soldiers be deployed immediately in Phnom Penh or its leaders could not return there to particiapte in the Cambodian peace process.

The radical group, whose leaders were forced to flee the Cambodian capital last Wednesday ahead of an angry mob, also demanded that Kor Teah, a Khmer Rogue employee left behind, be accounted for.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk, acknowledged by all factions as Cambodian head of state, told reporters Monday: "Mr. Khieu Saniphan and Mr. Son Sen have just set two conditions for their return to Phnom Penh."

The prince is in this Thai resort as chairman of Cambodia's U.N.mandated Supreme National Council (SNC), a reconciliation body in which power is shared by the Vietnam-installed Phnom Penh government and the Khmer Rouge-dominated three-party guerrilla alliance.

The leaders of all the factions are gathering to hold an SNC meeting that could not be held in Phnom Penh because of the violence directed at Mr. Khieu Samphan, nominal president of the Khmer Rouge, and Mr. Son Sen, its defence chief.

"Eight hundred men from UN-TAC (the U.N. Transitional Authorioty in Cambodia), now, this month" was how Prince Sihanouk expressed the Maoist group's first

They also wanted the return of their missing comrade, he said. 'Kor Teah must be found and sent to the Khmer Rouge zone,"

Prince Sihanouk said. The prince, former titular head of the guerrilla alliance who now says he is neutral, quoted Phnom Penh Premier Hun Sen as saying Monday the missing Khmer Rouge man had "disappeared." Earlier in the day, Phnom Penh Defence Minster Tie Banh said the Khmer Rouge would be permitted to bring more security troops into the Cambodian capital because of the assault.

"If they are not satisfied with our police forces they can ask for the protection from any forces they like, from UNTAC, from UNAMIC, or even increase their own security forces," he told UNAMIC, the U.N. Advance Mission In Cambodia, has 200 peacekeeping soldiers in Cambodia, a vanguard for a 12,000strong UNTAC force that will supervise elections to end decades of civil war and political turmoil.

Mr. Khien Samohan and Mr. Son Sen were forced to flee Cambodia when a mob attacked the Phnom Penh guest house in which they were staying. Mr. Khieu Samphan, who is believed to still report to "brother number one" Pol Pot, was slightly injured. Mr. Khieu Samphan and Mr. Son Sen had promised leadership roles in the 1975-1979 Khmer Rouge rule of Cambodia, the "killing field" years when a milhon Cambodians lost their lives to murder, forced labour and starvation. Mr. Tie Banh said additional Khmer Rouge fighters permitted back into Phnom Penh would have to follow strict guidelines. "If they increase the security force we have to make it clear it is for a specific role, that the role is only for the protection of their leaders and they must confine themselves to certain locations,"

EC restores aid to most Yugoslav republics ters agreed Monday to scrap sanctions against all Yugoslav republics except Serbia and its ally Montenegro, Beglian Foreign Minister Mark Eyskens said.

He told reporters that ministers decided to restore trade and financial help for Crotia, Slovenia, Macedonia and Bosnia Herzegovina.

"It would be paradoxical to continue sanctions against repubics that are behaving well," Mr. Mr. Eyskens said the question of diplomatic recognition of republics judged to be helping peace efforts was not covered by Monday's decision but would be discussed at next week's EC summit in Maastricht. He said Greece had opposed the formula for singling out Serbia and Montenegro by excluding them from positive measures. France also had reservations, preferring to await the outcome of the latest peace efforts by U.N. special envoy Cyrus Vance.

Mr. Eyskens said the aid mea-sures for republics would include restorating of trade preferences, 200 million ECUs ($250 million) in financial help and other benefits under the EC's phrase programme to aid Eastern Europe.

The Community imposed sanctions on the whole of Yugoslavia three weeks ago to try to force the warring parties to respect a ceasefire. But the EC countries said then they would look at ways to reward those parties which were blameless

Meanwhile, sporadic fighting erupted in breakaway Croatia Monday as Mr. Vance was due ot start talks on the deployment of peacekeeping troops in Yugoslavia, Croatian radio said. Mr. Vance flew into Belgrade ressing slowly.

The former U.S. Secretary of State was due to meet Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic and Federal Defence Minister Veliko Kadijevic in Belgrade.

But Croatian radio said the Croat-held city of Osijek was shelled overnight and two people were killed. It said the southern and eastern outskirts of the city in eastern Croatia were hit.

Thousands of people have been killed since Croatia declared independence from Yugoslavia in June and its Serbian minority rebelled. A week-old ceasefire has eased the fighting but has failed to end it.

Asked if the U.N. would deploy a peacekeeping force in Yugoslavia, Mr. Vance told Reuters as he headed for talks with Gen. Kadijevic: "It's much too early to say."

'Í am distressed that no great progress has been made," Mr. Vance said after his arrival in Belgrade Sunday, indicating obstacles remained to the deployment of a peacekeeping force.

The U.N. says the 14th ceasefire since fighting began must hold if peacekeeping troops are to be sent to Yugoslavia.

Mr. Vance said the warring sides must also agree on how and where to station them before he can recommend their deployment to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, who will advise the Security Council whether to deploy the troops.

LOS ANGELES (R) — A member of the disgraced pop duo Milli Vanilli apparently tried to kill himself, police said. Officers said Rob Pilatus, 27, slashed a wrist, took some pills and straddled the railing of a ninth-floor hotel balcony, threatening to jump. He was taken to Cedars Sinai Medical Centre where he was treated and placed under observation for 72 hours for his own protection, a spokesman said. Pilatus, with partner Fav Morvan, was a mem-ber of the Mili Vanilli pop group that was stripped of a Grammy Award last year after admitting they had not sung a note of their hit album Girl, You Know It's True. Russia to recognise Ukraine's independence - Kravchuk

KIEV (R) — Russia will recognise the Ukraine as an independent state very soon, President-elect Leonid Kravchuk said

Mr. Kravchuk, in his first interview after Sunday's election and independnece referendum, told

"In the very near future Russia will recognise the Ukraine, 100 per cent."

Asked if he had a concrete promise from Russian President Boris Yeltsin he replied: "I am 100 per cent sure. You can believe me."

The European Community (EC) called on the Ukraine Monday to respect Soviet international commitments on debt and nuclear arms if it secedes from the Soviet Union as a result of its independent referendum.

Dutch Foreign Minister Hans Van Den Broek said the 12 EC states were urging Ukrainian authorities "to do nothing which might call into question the Ukraine's control over nuclear weapons."

But the EC foreign ministers, meeting in Brussels, stopped well short of even mentioning possible recognition of the Ukraine as a separate state after centuries of Kremlin rule.

Official said the 12 countries had agreed beforehand to refrain from mentioning recognition until Ukrainian intentions became clearer and a possible solution was found to the problem of minorities in the Crimea.

Apart from calling on Ukrainian authorities to respect their share of the Soviet Union's commitments on foreign debt and arms control, the EC said they must ensure they respect human rights and the rights of minorities.

"Here we are flagging out four detailed areas," a British official said. "All that has to happen significantly before people start talking about recognition."

Meanwhile, the U.S. ambassa dor to Moscow said Sunday that Washington would not immeditely recognise the Ukraine as an independent country.

But Ambassador Robert Strauss predicted that the Soviet Union, which he said was economically "somewhere between unbelievably poor and worse,' would be an entirely different kind of association within a year. In a wide-ranging interview from Moscow with CBS Television, Mr. Strauss called the Soviet Union "a young democracy that is fighting and trying to find itself."

He said reports that Washington planned immediate recognitison of the Ukraine within a few days of Sunday's independence referendum "in my judgment, just won't happen."

'Army in Punjab for Pakistan war' powers, including detention with-

NEW DELHI (R) — The massive deployment of the Indian army in Punjab is not meant to provide security for elections in the troubled state but to prepare for war with Pakistan, a prominent Sikh leader charged Monday.

Simranjit Singh Mann, leader of the Shiromani Akali Dal Party, called Punjab polls expected in January a "ruse, a feint to induct the army for elections and then leap-frog for a military adventure into Pakistan."

Punjab state officials said 50,000 fresh troops have been deployed in Punjab with police out judicial approval, in preparation for state assembly elections in the second half of January. Mr. Mann told reporters that three army corps -- each with a strength of 60,000 troops — had been sent to augment the three corps deployed in Punjab, where Delhi has battled a bloody Sikh insurgency for a decade.

Information about the army's deployment came from a senior army officer in Punjab's capital, Chandigarh, his aides said.

Mr. Mann said the army had taken over hospitals and schools fresh troops. "For balloting you don't need tanks and heavy artillery," he said.

"India may be sitting on an AIDS volcano that will soon erupt, engulfing millions," said I.S. Gilada, secretary of the health group which organised the rally.

In Africa, where seven million people including nearly a million children are believed to be in-fected, politicians called for more open discussion of the disease.

"Teachers, politicians, churchmen, doctors, parents, brothers and sisters must all share information on AIDS, discuss it and teach about it," said Kenyan Health Minister Mwai Kibaki.

Rwanda's health minister warned in a similar message that someone contracts AIDS every chapel of St Andrew, was opened 90 minutes in Kigali, the capital

Shanghai reports

1st 4 AIDS patients

HONG KONG (R) - FORT Shanghai residents have developed AIDS this year, the first report of the fatal disease in China's biggest city, the China News Service said Monday. China has monitored more than 80,000 suspected acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) carriers since 1985 but none were from Shanghai, the Peking-funded news service said. City health authorities have taken precautions against the spread of the disease, including setting up a laboratory to vet all imported blood for hospital use, it said. Last month, Peking opened its first AIDS clinic, offering tests, treatment and counselling for patients. According to the Ministry of Public Health, 615 people had tested HIV-positive and eight have developed symptoms of the disease since 1985. Most of the known AIDS patients in China are drug addicts in Yunnan province, neighbouring Burma which is part of the notorious Golden Triangle opium-producing best.

Brazil's president launches campaign to fight AIDS

- President Fernando Collor de Mello named soccer star Pele to head Brazil's fight against AIDS and warned that eight million Brazilians could be infected with the HIV virus by the year 2000. In a televised speech, Mr. Collor de Mello launched a government programme to combat the disease and announced that Pele will head a national Commission for the Prevention and Fight Against AIDS. In Brazil, which has 155 million people, 21,000 have AIDS and more than 500,000 are infected with the HIV virus, the Health Ministry estimates. "This is a war that must be won," Mr. Collor said. "The lack of information is the first obstacle to be overcome." Without a national educational programme and preventive measures, it is estimated that eight million people in Brazil will be infected by the year 2000, he said. "Even so, it is probable we will get to the year 2000 with two million sick," Mr. Collor de Mello said. He said the AIDS campaign will be decentralised by setting up local commissions in 3,000 cities.
